

Untitled

Paranormal Survival Advice:

1. If it bleeds you can kill it. Simple enough when faced by anything wearing a meat suit go for the head, done and done.
2. Double tap. The golden rule of killing monsters so make sure what is dead will stay dead.
3. Don't give it a name or invite it in. Even the creepy know how to play on your emotions so remember the barrier between it and you stands there for a reason and never invite them in because you think you feel sorry for it, people who fall behind stay behind to fend for themselves and beside any idiot can tell the difference between undead granny trying to coheres you to let the monsters in and kick-ass granny wielding a shotgun and calling you out by your full name to embarrass you in front of your survival buddies. Never name anything supernatural, if it's inside already and you think you've identified it you have the right it to tell whatever it is to get the fuck out because whatever it is ain't welcome and should it choose to remain there haunting you will do everything to make it leave.
4. Don't follow the voices calling out to you. Stay away from the goddamn light Carol-Anne, again this plays of emotional response to help others and I'm not saying don't but think it through before wandering off down the dark passageway or into the spooky forest.
5. If you know it then there's a chance the monsters know it too. They know how to play people so take a moment to think things through and plan ahead.
6. Anything moving out the corner of your eye is a warning: Trust your peripheral vision when shapes, shadows, little feet or changes in light attract your attention. Ignoring the potential danger leads to your own misfortune, at least be aware of it if you aren't able to investigate it.
7. Time to move, when objects start to. Precautionary measures, unless you are waiting for shit to go flying around the room, is when things move around a space on their own while you're in it - leave quickly.
8. Be aware of your surroundings. Cold spots, change in lighting, feeling touch of movement, that sense of being watched are solid indicators you are not alone. Check with the group and make others aware of these experiences.
9. Never go it alone. Predators hunt from the herd preferring the weak, the sick and the ones that stray. One is easy prey.
10. Don't be a hero. Unless you seek a glorious death!!!